

Other Participants

Hans-Georg Fleck holds a Ph.D. from the University of Cologne in Medieval and Contemporary History, Eastern European History and Scandinavian Languages. He has been with the Friedrich Naumann Foundation for Liberty (FNF) since 1991 as a Resident Representative abroad, first in Poland, then in Croatia and the former Yugoslavia. He headed the FNF Jerusalem Office from 2005-12 and currently heads FNF's Istanbul Office.

Ahlam Abbasi-Ghanem has a Master's degree in Diplomatic Studies and a BSc in Civil Engineering. She worked at Orient House in Jerusalem from 2001-2006 as a political officer responsible for the European file, participated in several bilateral negotiations sessions, and was a member of the transportation technical committee. She co-directed an Israeli-Palestinian project for planning Jerusalem in peace.

David Harman is Professor of Education at Bard College Graduate Division. He was previously on the faculties of Harvard University's Graduate School of Education, the Hebrew University, and Teachers College, Columbia University. He has held senior posts at Israel's Ministry of Education, the World Bank and the American Jewish Joint Distribution Committee. He is author of eleven books and monographs.

Jeffrey Helsing is Dean of Curriculum in the Academy for International Conflict Management and Peacebuilding at the United States Institute of Peace, and has taught at universities in the US and the Middle East. His courses have included conflict resolution, human rights, comparative foreign policies, American foreign policy, and international relations theory. He has co-edited a book on the links between human rights, humanitarian law and peacebuilding, and written articles on Middle East conflicts.

Eshel Kleinhouse teaches history and civic studies and is headmaster of Hof Hasharon secondary and high school. Born on Kibbutz Hatzerim, he served as a combat soldier in the IDF. His MA thesis in education studied Israel youth delegations to Poland. He is a member of the Israeli-Palestinian "Prime" project writing a dual-narrative history textbook.

Yusuf Said Natsheh supervised the restoration of the Mamluk monuments in and surrounding the al-Haram al-Sharif and is the key Palestinian expert for the Unesco mission to Jerusalem. He is Director of the Department of Islamic Archaeology and Tourism at the al-Haram al-Sharif. He is a part-time lecturer at al-Quds University and has published books and articles on Jerusalem's architectural heritage.

Danny Rubinstein teaches journalism and Middle Eastern Studies at Ben-Gurion University. After military service he studied Sociology and Oriental Studies at Hebrew University. He was an information officer in Prime Minister Levy Eshkol's bureau, and then reported for Davar as a specialist on the Israeli-Palestinian conflict. He joined Haaretz in 1990 and was a columnist and member of the editorial board until 2012.

Walid Salem was born in East Jerusalem and has written thirty books and manuals on democracy, civil society, citizenship, refugees, Jerusalem and peace-building. He has been a consultant, evaluator and trainer for 30,000 people. Since 1993, he has been director of The Center for Democracy and Community Development in East Jerusalem. He lectures frequently at local and international conferences and seminars.

Roni Stauber is Academic Director of the Wiener Collection, Senior Research Fellow at the Kantor Center for the Study of Contemporary European Jewry and lecturer at the Department of Jewish History, all at Tel Aviv University. His research covers anti-Semitism, the Holocaust and its aftermath, and its impact on Israeli society. Currently, he's examining the role of Israel's Foreign Office in establishing the relationship between Israel and West Germany, 1953-1965